Fleecy Moss reveals some of Amiga Inc's Long term plans

I emailed the CTO of Amiga Inc, Fleecy Moss about some of his ideas for the longer term evolution of the Amiga OS and AmigaDE. He replied and has kindly allowed me to post the contents of his email to the Amiga Community.

hey there ;)

A team here in Britain is already laying the foundations to the AG3 feature set which has already recieved wide spread support from our B2B partners and suppliers.

Amiga Inc is moving full steam ahead, despite recent adversities, AOS4 is close to completion and we are moving forward with a new implementation of the Amiga Digital Content Engine. The legacy Amiga Digital Enviroment (AmigaDE) will be avaiable only to the Bplan Pegasos demographic (as well as PocketPC Devices) and will constitute the first phase of Amiga Digital Living Tangent Development. A wide variety of content driven products will contain different implementation subsets of Tao's Intent , targeted at the unique usability matrix of each target demographic.

While Amiga inc has faced great adversity this year, from competing operating systems that seek to steal the consistant effort we have poured into the Amiga operating system since the gateway days, 2004 looks to be an exciting year for the amiga community with the impending rollout of AmigaOS4 and shortly after the integration of the AG2 feature set into the OS. 2005 will see a whole new operating system based on AG3 released in pararel to AOS4.5/AG2.
