I'm considering it as a hoax, too. And not a good one at that, which is why I deleted it maybe five times in ANN's unmoderated queue today (probably submitted by the same person each time - I could look up IP addresses, but I don't think it's worth the trouble).

The lack of any web presence for KMOS (as well as lack of any links to an actual press release, online or dead tree edition) does make this sound rather suspicious.

I wonder if it's by the same person who did the fake Fleecy letter a couple days ago?
